Living Wages - WI families

- Wisconsin at one point was a national trendsetter in that it was one of the first States in the nation to allocate state funded resources to combat homelessness.
- In the mid 1980's the State Legislature allocated funds to support emergency shelters throughout the State, especially in urban areas. Though funding was not originally in then Governor Tony Earl's budget proposal, $600,000 was added by the legislature and approved by the Governor.
- In the early 1990's, Governor Thompson learned of the statewide increase in rural and family homelessness and in response, increased the emergency shelter allocation to $1.4 million per year and offered additional resources for transitional housing.
- Since that time no additional State effort has been secured and the anecdotal sense of advocates and other professionals that work in the field is that Wisconsin has fallen far behind our neighboring mid-western states.
